Sunderland Youth Offending Service

What is Sunderland Youth Offending Service?

The Sunderland Youth Offending Service is a partnership that works with other organisations across the city to provide services for young people up to the age of 17 years and their families.

The service works with young people in a number of ways:

- It helps young people who have been ordered by the Court to work with the service because they have committed an offence
- It works with young people at risk of getting into trouble
- It works with the families of these young people to try to avoid trouble
- It works with other organisations such as the Police and the Courts, to reduce crime in the city
- It provides information and assistance to children and young people trying to manage their Court orders

Who works in the Youth Offending Service?

The service consists of staff from a variety of different jobs that work together to supervise and help young people. In the team are staff from the Police, Health, Housing, Probation and Children's Services, amongst others. The team's priority is to get the right help to you at the right time.

Where is the Youth Offending Service?
